JUDGE LANDIS QUITS THE BENCH

OVERRULE MOTION TO QUASH INDICTMENTS

RECENT GRAND JURY LEGAL ONE IS THE DECISION OF JUDGE

NO ORDER WAS ENTERED BUT JUDGE NAPIER ANNOUNCES RULING.

MOTION IS FILED IN HUNTER RUSSELL CASE

Numerous Decisions Are Cited By Attorneys Interested In The Case.

Although no order was entered on the docket, Judge Ed Napier, sitting on the bench of the 30th district court Saturday morning, expressed himself that the motion to quash the indictment in the Hunter Russell case, and which virtually affected all of the 98 indictments returned by the last grand jury should be overruled

Attorney Ralph Mathis of the law firm of Mathis and Caldwell presented the motion and cited numerous decisions supporting his contention that the indictment should be quashed

Attorney C C McDonald of the law firm of Weldon McDonald and Cummings represented the state

Defense counsel took exception to the time of the selection of the grand jury commission and contended that the commission was not vested with the authority to select a grand jury and that therefore the grand jury itself was void and consequently all its acts void

Attorney Mathis contended that the proper proceedure in a case where a commission was not selected at a term of court prior to the term in which the grand jury it selects is to convene was to have the sheriff summon the proper number of men to compose a grand jury

The state s argument was that the defendant had slept on his rights that the proper time to raise the issue at bar was before the grand jury was sworn in and impanneled Attorney McDonald held and supported his argument by decisions of the court o criminal appeals and the supreme court of the state of Texas that the question raised by the defense was a challenge of the array of a grand jury and not a plea in abatement

It was argued before the court that the defendant had not shown any injury by reason of the alleged irregularities in the selection of a grand jury The remedy that the defendant had was the challenge of the array of the grand jury, the state contended.

Another issue raised by the defense was that the grand jury commission and the grand jury itself was not composed of residents from all parts of the county The state also answered this issue with the proposition that it was a challenge of the array and that a motion to quash was not an adequate remedy

PRESIDENT ASKS ADVICE OF SENATE ON PATENTS TREATY

WASHINGTON, Feb 18—The senate foreign relations committee had before it today a message from President Harding asking the senate s advice on the question of reviving the patents treaty with Germany which automatically lapsed in 1917 Although the president has power to revive by mere formal request this and other treaties which lapsed with the war declaration, if such request is made within six months of the ratification t the peace treaties, it was explained at the White House when the message was sent yesterday that this government also has the alternative of negotiating an entirely new treaty covering the subject of patents The president desired it was added to give the senate the same opportunity of advising which it would have if the latter course were to be followed although this was expected in this instance

Revival of the lapsed treaty would automatically restore its provision for reciprocity in the matter of protection of patents between the two countries Officials generally held the view that it would have no immediate effect on German patents now held by this country It being understood that the alien property custodian intends to retain these until congress passed legislation covering them

TO DROP CASE OF EMBEZZLEMENT IF SANDS SURRENDERS

LOS ANGELES Feb 18—Investigators of the murder of William Desmond Taylor, film director, were waiting today to see if anything would result of the announcement of Lee Woolwine district attorney that Edward F Sands missing butler secretary to Taylor, would not be prosecuted on an embezzlement charge preferred by his former employer if Sands could prove himself innocent of the slaying of Taylor and enable them to untangle the murder mystery

DECISION AFFECTS CORPORATIONS THAT HAVE REORGANIZED

CLEVELAND, OHIO, Feb 18—A decision handed down by Federal Judge D C Westenhaven yesterday against the government in its collection of income taxes from stockholders of the National Acme company of Cleveland means that the government must refund thousands of dollars to stockholders of many corporations throughout the country which reorganized in the past four or five years, according to internal revenue officers

The National Acme company, reorganized in 1918, increasing its capitalization from $5 000 000 to $25,000,000 Each share holder was given five shares of stock in the new concern at $50 par value plus $110 cash for each share of $100 par value in the old concern

The court holds that the internal revenue collector unlawfully certified the stockholders to pay tax on $223 per share of stock more than they were taxable under the law The transaction so far as the shares are concerned does not constitute a sale of stock but merely a transfer and that income taxes may be computed only on the basis of the $150 cash part of the transaction, according to the court s ruling.

ENOUGH MEXICO TROOPS TO REPEL ANY ATTACKS

Refers to Uprising of Gen Hernandez in Chihuahua As Insignificant.

By Associated Press

MEXICO CITY Feb 18—There is no reason for the alarm of United States authorities over threats of rebellion along the frontier according to Acting Secretary of War Serrano He said there are no rebels of consequence close to the boundary and the few desperados in Chihuahua do not dare attack a single federal military unit much less threaten Juarez

'Sufficient troops have been placed on the border to repel any attack and the garrisons at Juarez and other border points are competent The fears of the United States are absurd '

General Serrano referred to the uprising in Chihuahua of General Rosalio Hernandez as insignificant inasmuch as the latter is up in arms to accomplish vengeance for the murder of his two sons several months ago and is understood not to be disgruntled at the central government The secretary laughingly asked his inquirers if the defection of Francisco Marinelarena with four followers in Chihuahua could be classed as a serious rebellion

He admitted that the states of Michoacan and Jalisco were still somewhat disturbed Reports last night from Michoacan said that General Enrique Estradas forces had encountered the rebels under Colonel Francisco Cardenas in the morning and that in the skirmish five rebels were killed and eight injured General Lazaro Cardenas has been called from the isthmus territory to assume active charge of the operations in Michoacan acting directly under General Estrada who commands the forces in the six states of Colima Jalisco, Michoacan Guanajuato Aguas Calientes and Zacatecas General Luis Gutierrez has been removed from Michoacan and assigned to the isthmus

The war department also denied the rumors that Governor Sanchez of Puebla state contemplated revolt and produced a communication from General Salvador Alvarado now in Oaxaca denying reports that he is in rebellion

WILL DEVOTE HIS ENTIRE TIME TO THE POSITION HE IS HOLDING AS COMMISSIONER OF BASEBALL

KENESAW MOUNTAIN LANDIS

By Associated Press

CHICAGO February 18—Federal Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis today announced that he had resigned from the bench and would devote his entire time to his position of baseball commissioner

Announcement of it was made formally by the judge today as he took his place in court

There are not enough hours in the day for all of my activities said the judge "Therefore I have forwarded my resignation as federal judge to Washington effective March 1

Then the judge called the first case on his docket and refused to discuss the matter until court recess

When court adjourned the judge added but little to his one sentence statement regarding his resignation

That s all there is to it said the judge There isn t time enough to do everything I've worked hard I've been getting up at o o clock in the morning I've had to go without lunch for two weeks

Then too a fellow is in a bad way when he wants to stay in bed in the day time added the judge He declared that was the way he felt now and he realized that some remedy must be found

He declined to answer a question as to whether adverse criticism of his holding the position of judge and also that of baseball commissioner caused his resignation

Just let my statement stand he said

Seventeen Years as Judge

Judge Landis will have virtually completed 17 years as judge for the northern district of Illinois when his resignation becomes effective Rumors of the resignation have been current for months and intimate friends have known for some time that the action was imminent

It has been generally understood that Judge Landis would have resigned some time ago but for the attacks made on him by Senator Dial of South Carolina and the notoriety brought through his handling of the case of Willie Dalton, 14 year old bank robber

On the verge of resigning when these things came up the judge changed his plans informing friends that he would never resign under fire Senator Dial had attacked the judge because of the latter s statement that bank officials sometimes were partly responsible for robberies by boys because they did not pay adequate salaries Senator Dial and Representative Welty of Ohio later brought impeachment proceedings against the judge the representative basing his case on the holding of two jobs by the judge Both case were dropped

Shortly before Dalton robbed a local bank Judge Landis had made his remark about salaries of bank clerks in the case of a young Ottawa Ill bank employe Various newspapers quoted Dalton as saying that he had committed his robbery because he felt through Judge Landis remarks that nothing would be done to him Dalton never said this and later in a signed statement said that he had never heard of Judge Landis remarks The story had spread however and the judge was severely condemned as having made statements which were declared to have influenced Dalton

Heads Baseball.

The judge became head of organized baseball shortly after the grand jury investigating into the 1919 world s series scandal He was offered $50 000 a year to take the position and after several refusals, finally agreed under condition that he remain on the bench too He insisted that his salary be only $42,500 explaining that his judicial income would bring the total to $50,000

Although 56 years old Judge Landis has always been known as a boy at heart and a lover of all forms of sport The baseball magnates urged him to reorganize baseball for the sake of the American boy and it was this plea which finally won over the jurist

The resignation of Judge Landis takes from the federal bench one of the most feared and at the same time the most respected judges in the country His unique conduct in court, where he frequently took the cases out of the lawyer s hands and took over the examination of witnesses himself caused him to be feared by all law breakers At the same time his reputation of administering justice regardless of the technicalities of the law, brought him universal respect

by JOHN FOX Jr.

©1910 1910 by CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

BEGIN HERE TODAY

ERSKINE DALE, captured in infancy by the Indians, is adopted by the chief KAHTOO and reared as an Indian under the name of White Arrow. He is told that his mother, captured with him, was killed.

Maltreated by an Indiana brave, Erskine flees to a settlers' stockade in Kentucky and is recognized by his mortally wounded father. The boy goes to Red Oakes, the great Dale plantation on the James river, now occupied by COLONEL DALE, younger brother of Erskine's father. The boy is kindly received by his cousins, BARBARA and HARRY. Erskine flees to the wilderness and leaves Red Oakes, legally his, to Barbara, after threatening to kill Dane Grey, with whom he has quarreled in jealousy over the girl. He is met by Shawnee Indians who persuade him to visit his foster-father, the old chief Kahtoo. In the Indian camp he finds a white woman condemned to death. Her beautiful half-breed daughter, EARLY MORN, is loved by Erskine's enemy, Black Wolf.

GO ON WITH THE STORY

The old chief's eyes shifted uneasily.

"Why did you leave us?"

"To see my people and because of Crooked Lightning and his brother."

"You fought us."

"Only the brother, and I killed him." The dauntless mien of the boy pleased the old man. The lad must take his place as chief.

Now White Arrow turned questioner.

"I told you I would come when the leaves fell and I am here. Why is Crooked Lightning here? Why is the new prophet? Who is the woman? What has she done that she must die. What is the peace talk you wish me to carry forth?"

"The story of the prophet and Crooked Lightning is too long," he said wearily. "I will tell tomorrow. The woman must die because her people have slain mine. You carry the white wampum to a council. The Shawnees may join the British against our enemies—the palefaces."

"I will wait," said the lad. "I will carry the white wampum. If you war against the paleface on this side of the mountain—I am your enemy. If you war with the British against them all—I am your enemy. And the woman must not die."

"I have spoken," said the old man.

"I have spoken," said the boy.

Just outside the tent a figure slipped away as noiselessly as a snake. When it rose and emerged from the shadows the firelight showed the malignant, triumphant face of Crooked Lightning.

XI

Dressed as an Indian, Erskine rode forth next morning with a wampum belt for the council where the British were to meet Shawnee, Iriquois and Algonquin, and urged them to enter the great war that was just breaking forth.

One question the boy asked as he made ready:

"The white woman must not be burned while I am gone?"

"No," promised the old chief. And so White Arrow fared forth. Four days he rode through the north woods, and on the fifth he strode through the streets of a town that was yet filled with great forest trees. He slipped to the house of an old priest, Father Andre, who had taught him some religion and a little French. The old man was distressed when he heard the lad's mission.

"I am no royalist," he said.

"Nor am I," said Erskine. "I came because Kahtoo begged me to come. He could trust no other. I am only a messenger and I shall speak his talk; but my heart is with the Americans and I shall fight with them."

At sunrise the great council began. On his way Erskine met Grey, who apparently was leaving with a band of traders for Detroit. Erskine met his eyes and Grey smiled:

"Aren't you White Arrow?" Somehow the tone with which he spoke the name was an insult.

"Yes."

"Grey's face, already red with drink, turned purple with anger.

"When you tried to stab me do you remember what I said?" Erskine nodded contemptuously.

"Well, I repeat it. I'll fight you anywhere and in any way you please."

"Why not now?"

"This is not the time for private quarrels and you know it."

"I can wait—and I shall not forget. The day will come."

The old priest touched Erskine's shoulder as the angry youth rode away.

"I cannot make it out," he said. "He claims to represent an English fur company. His talk is British but he told one man—when he was drunk—that he could have a commission in the American army."

The council-fire was built. Three British agents sat on blankets and around them the chiefs were ringed. The burden of his talk varied very little.

The American palefaces had driven the Indian over the great wall. They were killing his deer, buffalo, and elk, robbing him of his land and pushing him ever backward. They were many and they would become more. The British were the Indian's friends—the Americans were his enemies and theirs; could they choose to fight with their enemies rather than with their friends? Each chief answered in turn, and each cast forward his wampum until only Erskine, who had sat silent remained, and Pontiac himself turned to him.

"What says the son of Kahtoo?"

Even as he rose the lad saw creeping to the outer ring his enemy Croked Lightning, but he appeared not to see. The whites looked surprised, when the boyish figure stood straight, and they were amazed when he adressed the traders in French, the agents in English, and spoke to the feathered chiefs in their own tongue. He cast the belt forward.

"That is Kahtoo's talk, but this is mine."

Who had driven the Indian from the great waters to the great wall? The British. Who were the Americans fighting now? British. Why were the Americans fighting now? Because the British, their kinsmen, would not give them their rights. If the Indians must fight, why fight with the British to beat the Americans, and then have to fight both a later day. If the British would not treat their own kinsmen fairly, was it likely that they would treat the Indian fairly? Would it not be better for the Indian to make the white man on his own land a friend rather than the white man who lived more than a moon away across the big seas?

He lifted his hand high and paused. Crooked Lightning had sprung to his feet with a hoarse cry. With a gesture Pontiac bade Crooked Lightning speak.

"The tongue of White Arrow is forked. I have heard him say he would fight with the Long Knives against the British and he would fight with them even against his own tribe."

One grunt of rage ran the round of three circles and yet Pontiac stopped Crooked Lightning and turned to the lad. Slowly the boy's uplifted hand came down.

With a bound he leaped through the head-dress of a chief in the outer ring and sped away through the village.

Some started on foot after him, some rushed to their ponies, and some sent arrows and bullets after him.

At the edge of the village the boy gave a loud, clear call and then another as he ran. Something black sprang snorting from the edge of the woods with pointed ears and searching eyes.

Another call came and like the swirling edge of a hurricane-driven thunder-cloud Firefly swept after his master. The boy ran to meet him, caught one hand in his mane before he stopped, swung himself up, and in a hail of arrows and bullets swept out of sight.

XII

The sound of pursuit soon died away, but Erskine kept Firefly at his best, for he knew that Crooked Lightning would be quick and fast on his trail.

He guessed that Crooked Lightning had already told the tribe what he had just told the council, and that he and the prophet had already made use of the boy's threat to Kahtoo in the Shawnee town.

The old chief looked grave when the lad told the story of the council.

"The people are angry. They say you are a traitor and a spy. They say you must die. And I cannot help you. I am too old and the prophet is too strong."

"And the white woman?"

"She will not burn. Some fur traders have been here. The white chief McGee sent me a wampum belt and I promised that she should live. But I cannot help you."

Erskine thought quickly. He laid his rifle down, stepped slowly outside and stretched his arms with a yawn. Then still leisurely he moved toward his horse as though to take care of it.

But the braves were too keen and watchful and they were not fooled by the fact that he had left his rifle behind. Before he was close enough to leap for Firefly's back, three bucks darted from behind a lodge and threw themselves upon him.

In a moment he was face down on the ground, his hands were tied behind his back, and when turned over he looked up into the grinning face of Black Wolf, who with the help of another brave dragged him to a lodge and roughly threw him within and left him alone.

On the way he saw his foster-mother's eyes flashing helplessly, saw the girl Early Morn indignantly telling her mother what was going on, and the white woman's face was wet with tears.

He turned over so that he could look through the tent flaps. Two bucks were driving a stake in the center of the space around which the lodges were ringed. Two more were bringing fagots of wood and it was plain what was going to become of him.

FARM BLOC MAY DECIDE ON CLAPPER FOR NEW LEADER

KANSAS SENATOR REGARDED AS BEST QUALIFIED FOR THE TASK.

WILL SUCCEED KENYON WHO RECENTLY RESIGNED

Iowa Leader Quit Because He Was Worried of Opposing Colleagues.

By MARK SULLIVAN,
National Political Correspondent of the New York Evening Post and Wichita Daily Times.
(Copyright, 1922, by New York Evening Post.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 18.—The departure of Senator Kenyon somewhat leaves the farm bloc worse off for leadership. It is true Senator Kenyon was not a leader in the usual sense. The farm bloc hung not upon his personality, but upon economic conditions in the home states of the individual members. Nevertheless it was Senator Kenyon who presided at their meetings and who provided a focus for them in the alignment against the regular republican organization.

SULLIVAN

There are others remaining in the farm bloc who are as able as Kenyon, but not many others who command as much confidence as Kenyon did. There are several members of it more radical than Kenyon but, none who inspire so much dependence on his judgment. Leadership is largely an accident of personality. McNary of Oregon is fully as able as Kenyon. Indeed, McNary has enough ability to qualify as an unusual senator, but he has not the steadily burning ambition that leadership calls for. Norris of Nebraska is a senator of long experience but the rather extreme form of his radicalism would cause some members of the farm bloc to hesitate about accepting him as leader. Probably the man who will come closest to stepping into Kenyon's shoes is Cupper of Kansas.

To be the leader of an insurgent movement against a regular organization takes unusual qualities. It is a disagreeable task in a double sense, and to carry it through involves willingness both to be disagreeable yourself and to endure disagreeableness from others. It is commonly believed that one of the reasons for Senator Kenyon's willingness to quit lay in the fact that he was tired of being disagreeable. Kenyon is a friendly and fairly gregarious person, and the long strain of standing out against the regular party leaders got on his nerves.

The leader of an insurgent movement is made aware every minute of every day in a thousand subtle ways that he has outlawed himself and that he is not a part of his party fraternity. He is outside the lodge, so to speak, and he is made to feel so constantly. That is the reason it happens occasionally that a man who merely starts out by leading a temporary rebellion ends by becoming a solitary and embittered man. There is, at least, one example of this in the senate now. It was for this fate that Kenyon did not have the stomach. His speech against Newberry, which was one of the latest and most conspicuous of his acts of insurgency, carried much evidence of how unpleasant to himself Kenyon felt his insurgency to be. When the case came up Kenyon said it would be much more agreeable to vote to seat Newberry, and that, if it was a matter of Newberry's fate alone, he would probably vote for him, but that it was a matter of principle and precedent.

His Position Grew Irksome.

There are men who enjoy this kind of rebellion and conspicuous standing out from the crowd, but Kenyon had moods when he didn't like it, and it was in these moods that he longed for the peace and security of a federal judgeship. Moreover, Senator Kenyon was friendly with his colleagues, the senior senator from Iowa, Cummins, and to Kenyon it was unpleasant to be continually voting on the other side from Cummins. By implication Kenyon was constantly saying in effect that Cummins was wrong. Cummins and Kenyon could not both be right.

To what extent President Harding and the regular republican organization hoped to profit or may profit by Kenyon's retirement remains to be seen. Probably not much. If there was any expectation that by depriving the farm bloc of its leadership it would be possible to destroy or greatly weaken the bloc, that expectation will probably be defeated. The public interest in Kenyon's retirement, which has made it nation-wide issue, has robbed the act of most of its possible benefit to the regular republican organization.

Just how much this motive may have figured with President Harding no one can tell. It is hardly to be believed that Harding made Kenyon a federal judge out of love and affection solely. Harding does not have love and affection for men who flout their party organization as Kenyon did. Harding seems to be a man who feels personally hurt by lack of party loyalty. He had that point of view long before he was president, back in the days of the progressive party. On the other hand, it is certain that Harding and the other party leaders did not invent the idea of offering a federal judgship to Kenyon in order to get him out of the senate. Kenyon has longed for a federal judgship for years.

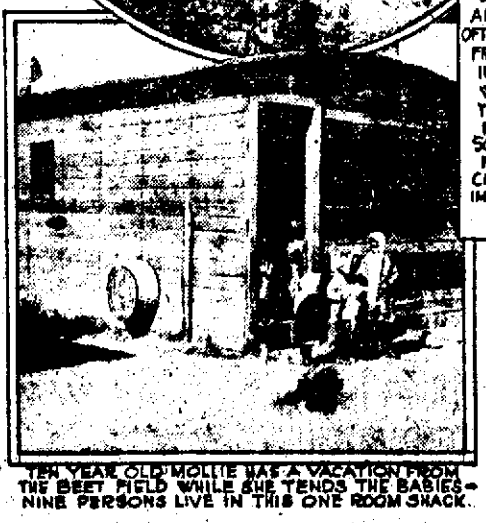
Children Exploited In Beet Sugar Fields

The GIRL WITH THE KNIFE — RUSSIAN CHILD of EIGHT YEARS TOPPING BEETS. WORK DANGEROUS EVEN TO AN ADULT

A BEET WORKING FATHER and HIS HUMAN ASSETS — THE NUMBER OF CHILDREN HE HAS DETERMINES HOW MANY ACRES HE CONTRACTS FOR

MANY BEET WORKERS ARE NOMADS OFTEN DRIFTING FROM PLACE IN CAMP WAGONS- THIS MAKES REGULAR SCHOOLING FOR THE CHILDREN IMPOSSIBLE

IN THE COLORADO BEET FIELDS - THESE CHILDREN BEGIN THIS BACK-BREAKING TOIL at 4 and 5 YEARS OF AGE, WORKING EACH DAY DURING THE SEASON OFTEN FROM FIVE IN THE MORNING TILL DARK



TEN YEAR OLD MOLLIE HAS A VACATION FROM THE BEET FIELD WHILE SHE TENDS THE BABIES - NINE PERSONS LIVE IN THIS ONE ROOM SHACK.

By JOHN GARRETSEE

DID you, comfortable reader, ever go out into a sugar beet field on a damp chill morning in spring at the first crack of dawn, get down on your petted and pampered knees and spend the day there thinning out infant beet plants up one seemingly endless row and back the next, and so on without ceasing until evening gave dubious relief to chapped hands, bruised knees and aching back? Did you keep this up day after day for weeks?

Then did you welcome a change, even though a melancholy one, when with the coming of the blistering dog days you were given a hoe and sent forth to the fields even earlier, for the blessed daylight tarried longer with you then?

Did you outline the torture of aching back and legs and blistered palms and prostrating heat till with the coming of the chill fall rains they took your hoe away from you and gave you a heavy knife? Then were you requested—nay, urged—to go again with the dawn, and till dark each day tear from the earth the beets now grown huge, heavy and tenacious and with sweeps of the big knife cut off the top of each? Were you lucky enough to avoid slashing your leg with the unwieldy weapon on the down stroke, an accident you may have seen happen to your neighbor in the next row?

But if you find labor of this sort rather appalling to your adult mind either by experience or from description can you imagine how steady weeks of such grueling toil would have affected you if you had been put at it when you were eight or nine years old or even younger? Impossible and ridiculous, you say? Ridiculous, perhaps, but not at all impossible, for that is what is actually happening in the sugar beet fields today.

In short, the beet sugar industry, one of the biggest American enterprises today, is exploiting in the basic branch of its business—the raising of sugar beets—not merely the low grade foreign laborer, but the children of that laborer.

Take, for instance, Colorado, one of the sugar beet raising states that have so far been investigated by the National Child Labor Committee. There the Committee found five thousand children between six and fifteen years regularly engaged in raising beets.

The Federal Children's Bureau has also been making an intensive study of the Colorado situation. Of 1,077 children included in this study seven-tenths were the children of contract laborers. The rest were children of the beet growers. Over one-fourth were under ten years of age, a small percentage under eight. Less than one-fifth were as much as fourteen years old. Considerably over a half ranged from nine to thirteen. From sixty-nine to eighty-five per cent, according to the process in which the child was engaged, worked nine hours or more a day. From one-seventh to one-third, again varying with the process, worked eleven hours a day. The average working day for all processes was usually between nine and ten hours.

The physical effects of this labor were postural deformities and malpositions in seventy per cent of the cases examined by the Bureau's physicians. Another serious effect is the interference with education. Of 930 children from nine to sixteen years of age for whom school records were obtained over forty per cent were from one to seven years below the normal grade for their age. The transient contract child laborers leave school in March, April or May and it is often December or January before they are back in school again, if at all.

The more general studies of the National Child Labor Committee in Colorado and Michigan indicate that these conditions hold generally throughout the beet-raising sections and that little is being done to better those conditions. A farmer who owns or leases land contracts with the sugar company to furnish a certain number of acres on which beets are to be grown. The company agrees to supply the hand labor. The company then contracts with a laborer to do the work on a definite number of acres. The number of acres a laborer contracts to care for is based on the number of children he has—in other words, he is simply contracting the labor of his children.

The labor employed in the beet fields in Colorado is practically all foreign—Mexican, Japanese and Russian. The Mexicans and Japanese, however, do not work their children as much as do the Russians. The Russian children often begin work as early as four or five years of age. By the time they are ten or twelve they are considered toughened veterans and able to stand any amount of hard labor. It is no uncommon thing for parents to race with their children to see how much work they can get out of them.

The people with whom the investigator talked said there were few cases where the work of the children was really necessary to support the family. These Russians are rapidly buying farms and automobiles on the proceeds of their children's labor. The Russian regards each child as an asset, and when he becomes the father of another boy he considers himself five thousand dollars better off. Their women are valued for the number of children they can bear. Almost never do children of these people have to support a widowed mother. The more children she has the quicker she is married again. If a young fellow is lucky enough to marry a widow with children he is just that much ahead.

The State Superintendent of Schools of Colorado considers the beet worker one of the most serious problems, but says she has no power to handle the situation. The Denver school authorities come in direct contact with these workers. The Mexicans who work the beets bring their families back to Denver for the winter. They congregate in what used to be the old red light district. The housing conditions are miserable. They get back from the beet fields in December. Up to this time their families have not been in school. When these children are forced into school in midwinter and placed in classes with the other children they retard the progress of all the others. They are taken out of school again in April and go back to the beets, thus getting only four and a half to five months of schooling a year.

In Michigan, another beet state which has been studied by the National Child Labor Committee, conditions are very similar, excepting that the nationalities of the workers are more diversified and there are fewer Russians and Mexicans and no Japanese. They are made up largely of Hungarians, Slavs from the small provinces, Poles and Germans. In Michigan, as in Colorado, the beet people are exploiting the foreign laborer and his children. Field bosses say that American labor was not wanted because "a Yankee can't stand the hard work."

Living conditions for these laborers in the Michigan beet country are abominable. The farmer supplies the quarters for the help, and his motto is, "Anything is good enough for the Hunkie." An old wood-shed, an abandoned barn, a cleaned-out chicken house, anything that gives partial shelter, will do and does. One-room shanties for families of from six to nine people are common. Often they have only one window. Not infrequently there is no window. They have absolutely no sanitary facilities, and the filth of these shacks is inconceivable.

Yet each year sees a migration of families from the industrial centers to the beet fields. Families are thus imported from cities as far away as Buffalo, New York City, Philadelphia, Erie, Akron, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, Milwaukee, Toledo and San Antonio, Tex.

In 1919 the beet laborer in Michigan got $24 an acre for beets planted in rows 18 to 22 inches apart and $22 an acre for beets planted in rows 28 inches apart.

In Michigan, as in Colorado, it is found almost impossible to enforce the compulsory education laws among the migrant beet workers. Of the families investigated by the Committee's agents about fifteen per cent of the children of school age had never attended school at all. Of those who had attended, most were far behind their normal grades or had dropped out of school long ago without graduating.

It is not enough to arouse in the breasts of the general public pity for these unfortunate children. These conditions will never be righted to any considerable extent until an appeal is successfully made to an enlightened self-interest, until the American voter in mass is made to realize that the beet sugar industry is doing considerably more than its proportionate bit to thrust upon the country a new crop of misfit citizens physically malformed, nervously abnormal, mentally dwarfed and unfit to play their part in ruling the future destinies of a democratic country.

ALL THE NEWS OF ALL THE SPORTS ALL THE TIME

UNIVERSITY CLUB AT LAST KNOCKED UNDER BY GAINES; LEGION BEATS METHODISTS

For the first time since the opening of the city league basketball season the fans apparently left the hall thoroughly satisfied last night. Of course, all were not overjoyed, but those who were not were so far in the minority that they don't count. The reason for all this unbounded joy was a 17 to 15 victory by the Gaines Motor quintet over the hitherto undefeated University club. The crowd was by no means one of the largest of the season but its enthusiasm knew no bounds and when the final whistle blew, pandemonium broke loose. Spectators stood up on their chairs, tossed hats into the air and yelled until it seemed as if the roof would cave in. The Gaines victory was so unexpected to players and fans alike that they could hardly realize it until the contest had been over several minutes.

The winners earner their victory and as Bill Viner said to the fans after the game, "The University club has only one alibi. It was beaten fairly because it was outplayed from every angle and in every department of the game." The motor boys fought like maniacs and became so riled up at times that personal fouls were called on them thick and fast. Had Harry Viner been able to locate the cage even occasionally the varsity might still have been undefeated. Harry dropped in only two of his 12 free tosses, Harper missed two out of three and Bill Viner missed his only shot. Carter, on the other hand, tossed in his only three free pitches.

Ralph Harper, varsity center, was so completely smothered by Doc Petersen that he was able to rage only one field goal. Nor did Petersen confine his attentions to Harper. He blocked everyone and incidentally tossed in three baskets, two of which were spectacular in the extreme. Frank Shaw fought as he never fought before and seemed to take peculiar delight in roughing his former coaches—Harry Viner and Tate. He gave the Gaines outfit their much needed pep and actually spelled the difference between victory and defeat.

Milton Gaines lasted about as long as usual before committing his four personal fouls, and his place was capably filled by Bergeron, though the later was on his fair way to being disqualified for too many personals before the affray ended. Roy Seyler had the Viner brothers, especially Harry, well bottled up, the latter getting away for only one field goal.

The game was marred to some extent by continual referee baiting though McClain called his fouls accurately and with his customary impartiality. Despite the roughness of the battle, personal venom among the opposing players was conspicuous by its absence. Good fellowship prevailed throughout the game as was evidenced by the cheer given the winners by the University club after the game—the first that has been given this season.

Ferguson Leads Legion

The fast floor work of "Smiler" Ferguson and his accurate long shooting was responsible for the 50 to 31 victory chalked up by the legion over the Methodists. Time and again the legion flash raced up the floor dribbling through the entire Methodist team and passed to either Bremen or Rogers for easy shots. When neither of these men was in a position to shoot, "Smiler" usually took one himself and made it good. Breman and Rogers also caged some fancy ones.

The first half ended with the legion leading by seven points. The Methodists threw a scare into them after the opening of the second period by quickly knotting the count, but their gameness availed them naught as the legion forwards immediately tore loose and tossed in counters right and left. Captain Neal and Leo Baldwin excelled for the losers.

Abe Breman had no opportunity to show his skill as a free shooter as the Methodists set a league record by failing to commit a foul, personal or technical. The scores:

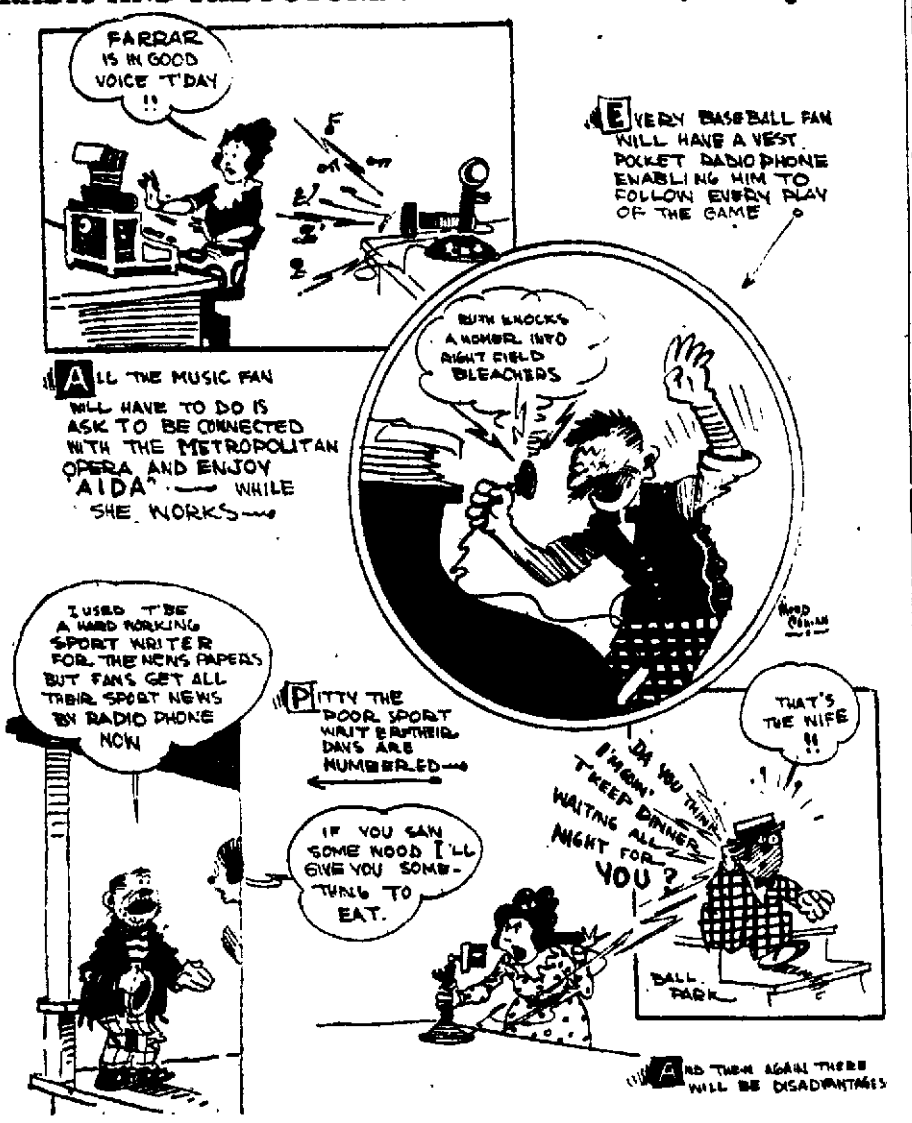
RADIO AND THE FUTURE FAN

—By Wood Cowan



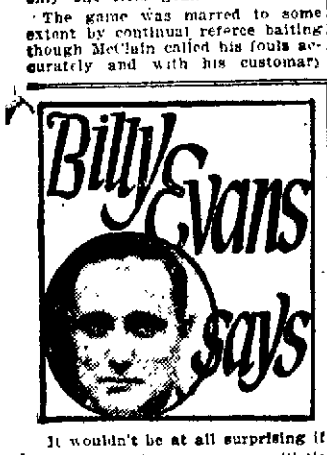
The world do move. And the sport fan is usually leading the parade. The Chicago police are using the radiophone now to detect home brewers and unfriendly crooks, but the sport fan has been a couple of jumps ahead of the cops along the line. A lot of amateur radio-fiend fans held conventions during the world series and spread the news by wireless to the waiting throngs, play by play. The up-to-the-minute fan with his vest pocket radiophone is seven hops and a jump ahead of the sporting extra, and the newspaper bulletin boards will soon be things of the past.

It won't be long before the poor sport writers will be mooching a bean sandwich in the breadline along with battleship builders, crooked ball players and other old nicknacks that have outgrown their usefulness and been left in the discard by modern progress. All you've gotta do is put one of these vest pocket receivers to your ear, tune it up to the baseball pitch, and follow the game, play by play.

If this pastime becomes as popular as all signs point that it will, the fan of the future is going to give the old ball park a wide path and the magnates will be compelled to hold their games in a movie studio and charge every radiophone nut for the privilege of listening in on the announcer telling how the game is progressing.

The music bug has come into his own, too. He gets concerts every night from 7 to 9—radio music direct from jazz by Eddie Cantor to opera by Farrar. And it won't be many moons before the whole gang of us will have radiophones hanging on our ears and will be following the plays of a baseball game in Pittsburgh, a horse race in New Orleans, and a prize fight in Oakland all at once.

The world do move!



It wouldn't be at all surprising if 1922 produced some new pugilistic champions.

Rocky Kansas in his recent bout with Benny Leonard failed to wrest the championship, but he proved beyond a doubt that Leonard is not invincible.

It was the general impression among the critics that Leonard would win in a romp. Such was not the case. The Buffalo boy forced Leonard to show his best wares to win.

Leonard is a pretty big lightweight. In all probability making the weight shows him up a bit. There are many who believe that Leonard would show to better advantage fighting as a welter. It is understood he is to take another whirl at Jack Britton.

Johnny Kilbane is still the featherweight champion. He has held the title almost 10 years. That is in itself very remarkable. Tex Rickard is now trying to have Kilbane risk his title in a bout at Madison Square with Charley Beecher.

A great many critics believe that the first good man Kilbane meets will be able to wrest the title from the champion. Many believe Danny Frush would turn the trick, but there were so many unpleasant incidents connected with that bout that it reflects no credit on the champion.

Dave Shade, the welterweight of the three "Fighting Shades," is to get his chance at Jack Britton's crown tonight. Shade will have a big following in that bout. There are many who believe the coast boy is just the type of fighter to beat Britton.

The middleweight title of course is in doubt. For my part Bryan Downey is the champion, despite the fact that Johnny Wilson is generally recognized as the titleholder. If ever a fighter was knocked out, Wilson was that individual in his bout with Downey at Cleveland. He took the count not once, but three times.

Wilson isn't taking any chances meeting anybody. As a matter of fact, his boxing status is such that it is impossible for him to appear in most of the states that permit boxing.

Johnny Buff is the bantam champion. However, if he ever meets Pal Moore to a decision, there is liable to be a change in that division. Moore was the unanimous choice of all the critics in the Milwaukee bout between those two fighters.

With several champions hanging on the ropes, it wouldn't be at all surprising if several titleholders dropped their crown in 1922. Jack Dempsey and Benny Leonard seem to have the best hold on their crowns.

NATIONAL PASTIME HAS SLOWED UP SINCE THE WAR

Johnson Offers Observations as to Standard of Play Since He Entered A. L.

By WALTER JOHNSON.

Do you think the game has improved since you joined the American league in 1907?

That is a question that always starts an argument. Talk with the veteran of 30 years ago and he will insist the game has gone back. Speak to the star of 20 years ago and he will offer the same opinion.

It seems to be customary for star players to always believe the period in which they happened to be a star was the time when baseball was at its peak.

I am going to be a bit different from the ordinary run. I am positive that the game showed a gradual improvement from the time I entered in 1907 until about 1913 or 1914.

Then for various reasons it seems to me that the game started to slow up. When the United States got into the world war, yes a year or two before that, the game suffered a severe slump.

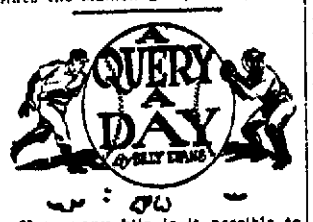
Ball players who have been in the American league from 10 to 15 years will frankly admit that the standard of play has been much lower for the last four or five years.

It doesn't seem to me that the clubs are playing as much real baseball as they once did. Few players now take any chances on the bases. Most batters are thinking of the old base hit, rather than pulling something out of the ordinary.

I feel that the lively ball has done much to slow up the game as far as playing any inside ball.

The lively ball, and the deeds of Babe Ruth, have caused all the hitters to place the healthy swing before the inside stuff. In addition, the elimination of freak pitching has further added to the confidence of the batters.

From the way the attendance records have broken in the last two years, however, it seems the public likes the slambang style of play.



How many hits is it possible to make in an inning without a run being scored? I understand that it is possible to make six hits, without a run going over the plate. Please explain.

It is possible to make six hits in an inning without a run being scored. The first batter triples but is thrown out at the plate trying to stretch it into a home run. The second batter also triples and is thrown out at the plate. The next three batters single, filling the bases. The sixth batter hits a grounder between second and third. It strikes the runner going to third. That automatically retires the runner and makes the third out. It also entitles the batsman to a base hit but no runs can score on such a play.

BRITTON IN DRAW WITH DAVE SHADE

Champion Has Edge On Opponent In Opinion of Fistic Writers.

NEW YORK, Feb 18—Jack Britton at 36 still is the master boxer and by virtue of that fact today remains the world's welterweight boxing champion. Last night in Madison Square Garden Britton met young David Shade of San Francisco, a courageous able lad, in a 15-round match. The judges decided the contest a draw and that enabled Britton to retain his title.

In the majority opinon of fistic writers at the ringside, however, the judges erred, for Britton appeared to have had the advantage on points over his young rival.

It is true that the Californian always was on the aggressive, that he made the champion miss occasionally, or rather frequently, but nevertheless Britton, whether retreating or standing his ground, was sending gloved fists against his opponent's head and body. Shade was missing too and many of his terrific assaults were cleverly smothered in the Britton defense. Shade shook the title holder several times with rights to the jaw, but was himself shaken oftener by both rights and lefts to the head.

Benny Leonard, lightweight champion, who also aspires to the welterweight title, was an attentive ringside spectator.

MARKETS

COTTON MARKET.

New York Cotton.

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—Reflecting rather active support of March contracts by spot houses the cotton market opened firm today with prices 11 to 18 points net higher. Sentiment was bullishly affected by the sale of 140,000 pieces at Fall River and by rumors that progress toward an early settlement of the New England wage situation was making satisfactory headway. The principal early sellers were Wall street and commission houses who were unloading March and May at the higher levels and there was later selling by some of the local traders under which prices eased off a few points from opening levels.

Near the close heavy speculative and trade buying developed advancing the list to new high levels for the movement with final prices 32 to 40 points net higher.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE

CHICAGO, Feb. 18.—Initial transaction today in wheat showed advances of ½ to 1¼ as compared with yesterday's close. May was quoted at 1.38½ to 1.39 and July at 1.21¼ to 1.21¾.

The market developed strength later when Buenos Aires closed 3c higher, with the pit element short, the finish was around three cents higher here than yesterday. Final prices were 1.34¾ for February, 1.40½ to 1.40¾ for May and 1.23¾ to 1.23½ for July.

Buying was induced by strength at Liverpool but quickly reacted on a renewal of profit taking.

Corn starting unchanged to ¼c lower, with May 62½ to 62⅝c and July 64 to 64¼c, showed strength on commission house buying.

There was plenty of support for corn on all breaks and the rally in wheat also helped the coarse grain. Final prices were 62½ to 62⅝c for May, 64¼c for July and 66⅝c for September.

Oats were steady but eared in sympathy with wheat. Prices were ⅛c lower to ⅛c higher, with May 41⅛ to 41⅜c; July 42½ and September 43⅝c.

Provisions brought the highest prices of the season on advances in hogs.

Weekly Grain Review.

CHICAGO, Feb. 18.—Soaring prices and a big volume of dealings in the wheat market this week have been generally taken as indicating widespread anxiety relative to possible world shortage of breadstuffs supplies. Compared with a week ago wheat this morning was up 3½ to 5⅝c a bushel. Other net gains for the week were corn 2⅝ to 3⅝, oats ½ to 1c, and provisions 77c to $2.10.

ACTING SECRETARY OF RUSSIAN RELIEF REPLIES TO HOOVER

CHICAGO, Feb 18.—Public men who stoop to play politics over the dead bodies and frozen forms of little children are no more to be respected than those international bankers who hold the bonds of the now destroyed and defunct czar's government, says a letter sent out today to members of the American committee for Russian famine relief, Walter T. Ligget, acting secretary.

The letter replies to an attack on the committee, attributed to Herbert Hoover, secretary of commerce.

PRESIDENT SIGNS CAPPER-VOLSTEAD CO-OPERATIVE BILL

FIUME IS AGAIN A SCENE OF UNREST

Governor Zanella Charged With Having "Anti-Italian Tendencies."

ROME, Feb. 18.—There is much unrest at Fiume with the fascisti and the adherents of the government of Governor Zanella opposing each other. General Specafico, commanding an Italian brigade which is occupying territory south of Fiume, ceded to the Jugo-Slavs by the treaty of Rappallo, has sent a company of troops to seize police headquarters in Fiume and restore calm. Zanella, who was elected president of Fiume in April last, recently discharged more than 150 Italians acting as detectives in Fiume. This action antagonized the Italian nationalist parties who desire reinstatement of the men.

The Rome press is incensed against President Zanella on account of what they regard as his "anti-Italian tendencies."

DIAMOND IMPORTER IS ROBBED OF GEMS THAT COST $76,699 WHOLESALE

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 18.—Sidney Krengel of Krengel Brothers, diamond importers of New York and Chicago, reported to police he had been robbed of diamonds which cost him $76,699, and which had a retail value of between $125,000 to $150,000 on an Illinois Central train which arrived from Chicago this morning.

The diamonds were in a wallet which he placed under his pillow in the Pullman. Mr. Krengel told police, and were insured for $50,000.

He discovered the loss, Mr. Krengel told police, when he returned from the washroom as the train was pulling into union station. A futile search was made of the Pullman for the gems.

Police questioned the train crew and a number of other persons, but all denied knowledge of the reported theft.

HAVE STATEMENTS FROM THREE MEN PRESENT AT A MURDER AT HOUSTON

HOUSTON, Feb. 18.—Police said today they had statements from three men arrested late yesterday, that they were present at the fatal shooting of Spero Xanthos, Greek cafe proprietor, at midnight Wednesday. Each denied firing the fatal shot.

The men in custody gave their names as Roy G. Smith and Bonnie Pierson of Houston and John D. Turner, Ellington field.

SATISFACTORY TURN IN THE FINANCIAL AFFAIRS OF NATION

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—Viewed in a statement issued by the White House as showing the "most satisfactory turn in the financial affairs of the country since the conclusion of 1919," an analysis of the December 31 bank call issued by Comptroller of the Currency Crissinger records the total resources of the national banks on that date, exclusive of rediscounts, at $19,420,000,000, an increase of $404,000,000 over the previous call in September. Describing the condition of the national banks as "very satisfactory," Comptroller Crissinger in his statement last night called attention to the fact that until the latter month their resources had shown a more or less steady decline from the peak of $22,741,000 in December, 1919.

The condition shown in the December call, the statement issued at the White House said, "demonstrates that the process of liquidation has been proceeding at such an excellent rate that it may fairly be said that we are well on the road to getting the 'frozen credits' thawed out."

TREE IS PLANTED IN MEMORY OF M'KINLEY

ATLANTA, GA., Feb. 18.—A tree was planted in Piedmont park today in memory of the late President William McKinley, who in a speech delivered here shortly after the Spanish-American war, advocated that the government share in the care of graves of Confederate soldiers.

"Every soldier's grave made during our unfortunate civil war is a tribute to American valor," he said in that address, adding that the Spanish-American war in which soldiers of the south joined with soldiers of the north in fighting, had wiped out all sectional lines.

COAST GUARD CUTTER ATTEMPTS TO RESCUE THE WEST CARNIFAX

BOSTON, Feb. 18.—The coast guard cutter Tampa reported today that she had come up with the drifting shipping board steamer West Carnifax at a point about 300 miles southeast of the Nantucket lightship. The message said the cutter was trying to send a line to the vessel by drifting, several attempts to shoot a line aboard having failed.

The West Carnifax, bound from Rotterdam to Galveston, in a message intercepted earlier in the week, said her fuel and food supplies were exhausted. She carries a crew of 40 men.

MAN WOUNDED IN RAID IN GALVESTON COUNTY; ANOTHER IS ARRESTED

HOUSTON, Feb. 18.—Antone Prino of Hitchcock, Galveston county, was in a Galveston hospital today, a bullet wound in his right leg, and he and A. Celest were charged with violating the national prohibition act, following a raid by three federal prohibition officers in a thicket near Hitchcock late yesterday.

W. W. Edwards, chief federal prohibition agent, here, took full responsibility for the shooting, declaring Prino reached for a shotgun and that he then fired his pistol.

YOUR REGULATOR.

When you went to school, you learned that water always seeks its own level That's why mother's copper wash boiler leaks through the hole in the bottom The water starts its journey back to the sea, soon as it gets a chance.

Sun evaporates ocean water. Moisture drifts inland, condenses and falls as rain. You see this rain when you stand beside a river. It is flowing—back to the sea, seeking its own level.

There you have the universal principle that governs all men and all conditions created by their stupidity or intelligence.

The average farm hand's pay has dropped to $43 32 a month without board and $30.14 a month with board.

Uncle Sam's department of agriculture announces this. It points out that farm wage rates during 1921 dropped an average of 37 per cent

That decline just about matched the drop in wholesale prices of food

Observe the universal law at work—wages and prices seeking a common level.

Herbert Hoover furnishes tables, showing prices out of line Some prices are twice as high as in 1913. Others have deflated to the pre-war level or below.

Gradually you'll see all prices meet at a common level No one knows what that level will be. Prices extremely low now may rise to strike a medium with prices now extremely high.

Then, when equilibrium or balance is established, a business boom will start.

Ability is among the things that seek their own level, for the law of compensation is a natural force, as inexorable as the law of gravity.

That's why "you can't keep a good man down." That's why the incompent is shouldered aside by a better man.

We have to pay for something in this world. And, in the long run, we get no more out of life than we give

NOTHING IS IMPOSSIBLE.

Could you keep a fire burning under water? It has just been done, 50 feet under the surface of New York harbor

Near Staten Island, a 36-inch steel water pipe on the floor of the ocean was smashed by a dredge. It had to be cut away.

Divers came up out of the muddy depths and reported that the water immediately extinguished their steel-cutting acetylene torches

But an "underwater fire chisel" has been developed by a company that salvages submarine wrecks. This chisel was brought into play. As it burns, it generates a gas which forces back the water on all sides, leaving an open or hollow space for the flame.

That is scientific magic.

If the inventor had lived 500 years ago, his exhibition would have made even kings kneel to him in superstitious terror

Suppose you were in the hands of enemies, about to be shot, and they told you, "We'll spare your life if you can light a fire under water and keep it burning."

Your answer probably would be, "It can't be done"—even though your life depended on it.

Yet it can be done, as in the device used under water near Staten Island, an electric spark starting the flame

Learn from this that nothing is impossible.

Archimedes, who discovered the principle of the fulcrum, said he could move the earth if some one gave him a fulcrum, a long enough lever and something away from the earth to stand on

Nothing was impossible, to Archimedes.

Yet, if he'd been asked to weigh the earth, he probably would have said it couldn't be done unless he had a big enough pair of scales and a star to rest them on.

Modern scientists, with a delicate mechanism which measures the attractive power of lead and other elements, have discovered that the earth is about six times as heavy as an equivalent bulk of water.

Thus the earth has been accurately weighed—found to tip the scales at 6600 billions of billions of tons.

Such staggering achievements should inspire all troubled and discouraged people. All problems can be solved. The solution is found by the one who never gives up the fight, who refuses to recognize the phantom, defeat.

THE GREAT AMERICAN HOME

LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE DISCUSSES THE "MOVIE" LIFE IN HOLLYWOOD

Louis Joseph Vance, famous novelist and playwright, has written especially for NEA Service Inc., an intimate expose of life in Hollywood's motion picture colony. He tells why he believes the real life of movie folk is abnormal.

Many of Vance's stories have been put on the screen under his personal direction During the past seven years he has spent much time in Hollywood, and for a time headed his own motion picture company.

Out of his personal experiences Vance—whose greatest fame came with "The Brass Bowl," "Joan Thursday" and "The Lone Wolf"—has written his latest novel around life in Hollywood It is "The Coast of Cockaigne," now running serially in McCall's magazine, and to be published shortly in book form under the title "Linda Lee, Inc" This novel practically forecast many sensational aspects of moviedom revealed in real life by the William Desmond Taylor tragedy

LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE
Copyright, 1922, NEA Service Inc

It was the author's first dip in the troubled—he didn't know how troubled—waters of motion picture making, and because he fondly believed the author of a picture ought to be of some use to the producer other than as a name to be shown on the main title, he conceived the brilliant idea of journeying to California and making himself helpful in the studio. He was very green

The New York office of the producing company endorsed the suggestion with enthusiasm and handsomely offered to pay his transportation to "the cost" In those days producers, too, were green

Since then both have learned that nobody is more welcome 'on the lot' than an author, except a man with a virulent case of smallpox

The author and his wife arrived in Los Angeles on a blistering Sunday evening in August. Four nights on a train in such weather had left them gritty and sticky and fretful They were indulging fond anticipations of a hot bath and a cool bed each

Dining Is Put Before Bathing

It was not to be A representative of the studio manager met them at the station and informed them that the manager himself had graciously arranged a supper in honor of the author, that he might make the acquaintance of the company There was no time for even a bath

At the hour appointed the company put in appearance The studio manager was a small swart frisky body with a pronounced beak and a phosphorescent smile He loved everybody impartially When he wasn't pawing the women he was winding an arm round the waist of some one of the men

He announced that, as a treat, he had arranged to have the author and his wife accompany him after supper to a neighboring church where he was booked to address the congregation on the morals of the motion picture colony'

The company as a body trailed along Their entrance, in the middle of the service, created some sensation It was not a fashionable congregation, as that term is understood But it looked as if it went to the movies for amusement

Such a Sermon Is Seldom Heard

Instead of a sermon the preacher introduced the speaker of the evening with an undertone of hostility. The studio manager, in no wise dismayed, mounted the rostrum, with his phosphorescent smile the more brilliant for beads of honest sweat, and held forth vigorously in defense of the morals of his associates and employes. He danced in the heat of his eloquence and perspired profusely and pounded the reading desk

One gathered that Hollywood ought to be grateful for the presence in its midst of this little company of immaculate souls whose beautiful lives, domestic as well as professional, were calculated to leaven the whole lump of the community.

Hollywood such part of it as was present, attended with entire apathy When he had finished the preacher made a few vague observations on what "this man" had said, then dismissed the congregation As it filed out it passed the studio manager herding his flock on the sidewalk and volubly arranging to take it immediately down to Venice, the local Coney Island to "have some fun '

This happened in 1914.

When representatives of the motion picture industry indulge in such antic effronatery, they should not be pained, as they seem to be, when their frantic protestations of impeccable virtuousness are not received with complete credulity. They were better advised to confine themselves to the assertion that humanity is much of a muchness, that moral conditions inside the motion picture industry are not much worse than outside it

Unfortunately they are, when they depart from conventional standards, more conspicuous, partly by reason of the deathless curiosity which the public entertains concerning the private personalities of its mimes, and partly because the latter know that within the ranks of their own profession, it makes precious little difference to anybody what the complexion of their private lives may be all that is asked of them is that they shall faithfully do their part toward providing the public with amusement.

Men and women the world over, being mortal flesh, are prone to misconduct But people in private life live in deadly fear of public opinion which requires but slight provocation to work their social and often their financial ruination

It is only when sense of power derived from possession of great wealth or otherwise makes them arrogant that they assert their independence of public opinion by openly affronting it

Public Opinion in Hollywood Lenient

Motion picture in common with other professional people acquire some of this sense of power through the spread of their popularity as entertainers and in such communities as the Hollywood of the movies, public opinion is lenient.

There are distinctly two Hollywoods the colony of future folk which clusters round and lives only for the studios and the community of small tradesmen and middle-class Americans such as made up that congregation which listened with contained animus to platitudes of virtue mouthed by a studio manager whose sense of common fitness had not availed to prevent his going from the pulpit to a typical party '

This Hollywood knows that some of the motion picture people lead irregular lives, but their resentment has been so curiously inarticulate as to warrant the belief that they have been tolerant less through ignorance than because they prize the prosperity which the studios and their highly-paid free-handed folk have brought This attitude of the outside Hollywood has been measurably responsible for the tendency betrayed by certain of the picture people to follow their whims openly and let public opinion go hang

But there are other reasons

A prominent motion picture manufacturer said to me recently "The most dangerous weapon you can put into the hands of ignorance is independence.'

He was talking about the people he employed the actors and actresses and directors who for years on end have enjoyed in return for the slenderest outlay of intelligent effort incomes that dwarf those of many millionaires

This is not said in depreciation of the great abilities and the admirable work of a handful of great artists both on the acting and the directorial sides, it is said with only the hugely overpaid mediocrities in mind—who are in the majority

I know an actress of the most middling ability who has been for nearly two years enjoying a weekly wage of $5 000

I can name a number of directors by no means of the first rank in their profession who are paid $25 000 for each production they make Most of these men turned to pictures when, like William Desmond Taylor they had not displayed sufficient ability to the legitimate stage to command a regular living wage

A friend of mine was the guest of a certain director at a New Years drinking bout in one of the restaurants favored by the picture folk, he saw the bill rendered and paid, it was $1,500, in round figures—for five persons

Up to the present time when the public is beginning to manifest its impatience with poorly thought out pictures by staying away from them salaries of $1 000 a week have been nothing to boast about in the studios

With gold thus literally poured into hands little if any better than incompetent, it is little to wonder at that those who benefited by such bounty lost their heads and imagined they could do as they pleased — 'and the public be damned"

Give Crowd Studios Ready to Pay Price

Furthermore when such salaries were offered and paid for work that required no more of the player than ability to look well and do or be gestures invented by the director youth and beauty flocked like moths to the glare of the lights and when it found competition keen people willing to pay with its bodies the price of a start

During my brief career as a motion picture producer in Los Angeles in 1916 I had often and again girls who, by dress and manner indicated that they had been brought up in homes of refinement offer themselves more or less brazenly to the casting director in return for a days work as an extra woman at a wage of $3 or $ or it might be $7 50—not for the money involved always though heaven knows many of them needed money but for the chance they foresaw of catching the eye of the director by some manifestation of good camera value and being thereby started on the way up to the eminences

It isn't in human nature to resist such temptations Neither is it done

Bear in mind that the invitation to irregular moral relations in this just related instance didn't come from old hands in the picture business but from inexperienced beginners many of them young women drawn from that very class which holds up its hands in holy horror of the goings on of picture folk in Hollywood

No Mental Recreation for Restless People

Vanity and greed are cardinal motifs of human psychology, and they know no law other than fear

In Hollywood there was, for long, nothing to fear

There was and is moreover, a vast restlessness Picture people lead active lives, much of the time in the open, storing up energy that must find some outlet especially in the dry and stimulating climate of southern California is this true Few of them lead mental lives of any consequence few are readers or students such as his apologists claim Taylor to have been

When their day's work is done they must find something in the way of recreation And in Los Angeles there is little to do after nightfall but 'go to the movies'—a pastime that palls even upon a movie actor unless he happens to be in the picture on exhibition

Otherwise one may motor down to Venice or Santa Monica to one of the restaurants that cater to a dance-mad generation If one does, one finds onself in the same social atmosphere as at the studios For relief from like monotony mankind will ever turn to strange expedients, even to unholy ones

Alcohol and Drugs as "Cures" for Ennui

There is a great deal of mixed drinking done in private in Hollywood, and the consumption of large quantities of alcohol is not conducive to chaste relations between man and woman

And when alcohol loses its novelty weaker souls turn to drugs in their quest for some new thing

One of the best beloved of motion picture stars once told me in the presence of her husband of a motor trip which she had taken with a party of picture people exclusively in two cars a trip into Mexico lasting over a period of several days She said that on the first night they spent away from Hollywood she discovered that with the exception of the chief figure she was the only member of the party who wasn't drunk or dope The others made each night stop the cars on off a drug store

I don't relate this as an indictment of the entire film colony as a charge of drug addiction but simply for what it may be worth as indicating the extent to which people may be driven to seek strange cures for the ennui of having more success than nature has equipped them to handle

MILLIONS MORE STARVING TO DEATH IN RUSSIA, SAYS NANSEN, THE EXPLORER

By DR FRIDTJOF NANSEN,
Arctic Explorer and Russian Relief Worker, Who Recently Returned From the Famine-Stricken Volga Region to England
(In an interview in London with Milton Bronner Correspondent of NEA Service)

LONDON Feb 17—To come back to the lands of plenty after being in famine stricken Russia is like waking from a terrible nightmare

The American people have been generous and prompt in aiding the Russian famine sufferers but they can't possibly visualize the extent of the calamity

The lands along the great River Volga were farms followed daylight hours in an and equipped from appropriately equal to that of all France

Of those people the great number of nine out of millions is directly menaced with death and millions—no matter what frantic effort we make now—are doomed to die

Every time the clock ticks a dozen of wasted skeletons that were men and women and children are toppling over dead

More Desolate Than the Arctic.

I am telling you what I have seen When you enter the famine lands of Russia you enter the lands of terrible silence The very birds have shunned this country of hunger It conveys a greater sense of desolation than the Arctic ice fields.

Many of the hamlets have lost two thirds of their population And the survivors struggle—in rags in filth—starving freezing all hope gone conserving as best they may the precious spark of life clinging forward only to one thing—the release that death brings

In Lugansk I saw a pile of stiff frozen corpses lying in the cemetery awaiting burial The weary grave diggers told me they came by carloads every day They were picked up in the streets and alleys They were found in hallways Sometimes they were found in houses where every member of the family had succumbed

What Donations Are Accomplishing

Every American dollar every English pound sterling every French franc spent now in supplying food and agricultural implements to the Volga is fighting three things

First the terrible famine of today

Second the chances of an even more terrible famine in the next year

Third the plagues of disease that must arise in the Volga country and spreading across Europe and America decimating by thousands and tens of thousands

Typhoid typhus and cholera have already made their appearance in the Volga country

The poor people cannot help themselves today the day no food, no medicine And tomorrow together we pay the bitter price of plagues

Experience has shown that we cannot successfully build a wall against epidemics They cannot be confined to fixed points of origin They sweep out in fitter life

World May Reap Bitter Harvest.

If the people of the world are callous to the sufferings of their fellows this winter they may reap a bitter harvest of disease and death in their own homes next summer and fall

Four months ago I begged the civilized nations of the world represented in the Assembly of the League of Nations to do something

Millions have died since my appeal fell on deaf ears

The organization for saving the survivors of those millions then, the Nansen relief organization was are starving in railways

[illegible] disease

[illegible] disease

[illegible] we do it

[illegible] to keep the people [illegible] starved, [illegible] the survivors [illegible] starving in the spring

Now Is Time To Put Us on Our Feet.

'A month ago I was in the famine stricken Regions of the Volga. I saw there human suffering and death on a scale which it is impossible even to imagine unless you have seen it with your eyes.

I saw, too, the magnificent work of the American Relief Administration. Some day the world may know the full tale of what it owes to Mr. Hoover and his helpers.

I appeal with all my heart to the great American people to support the great work of charity which they are doing

"What Shall We Call Him?" Probably Eve Asked This Question First, and, Doubtless Adam Objected to Her Choice of Labels, But Eve Had Her Way As Do Mothers Today

Copyright, 1922, by Public Ledger Company

OF COURSE the recent arrival in the Endor household was very, very welcome: that much is certain. In fact, the energetic debate which was disrupting the wonted quiet of the home was with a view to the later well-being of the little citizen who stared vacantly at the ceiling and made faces. He had patiently waited about the premises for a month now, notwithstanding which he had not yet been dignified by a title. And that was what all the discussion was about.

"But, my dear!" protested the professor, "think of the depressing commonplaceness of William! The whole world is overrun with Williams, from the Conqueror down to our honored—"

"It was a good enough name for father, and I like it," interrupted the professor's wife. "You cannot get far away from the ordinary names without being ridiculous; so what's the use."

"My idea, on the contrary, my dear, is this," replied the professor, pausing in his walk and bringing the expository forefinger of his right hand into contact with the illustrative palm of his left. "Depart radically from the ordinary names, if you have at heart the welfare of your progeny. Do not condemn a helpless infant to struggle through this vale of tears without a distinctive and distinguishable cognomen. Williams and Thomases and Johns certainly have made a mark here and there in the world, but it has been in spite of their deplorably ordinary nomenclatorial designations. And furthermore," he continued with evident satisfaction, "I have today hit upon a name for our first-born which is admirable, commemorative, euphonious, distinctive. It is Pingree." And with a victorious gesture the professor seated himself, watching narrowly, however, to see how his idea would be received.

"Pingree!" repeated the professor's wife, tentatively. "Pingree! Well, I don't dislike it very much, I believe." After a pause she suggested, "Pingree William, then?"

The professor started up and paced the floor again. "Now, my dear," he said, "while you are indisputably a party at interest, and possessed of equal or superior rights to my own in the premises, can I not persuade you to eliminate that commonplace name of William? I have selected the first name, in which suggestion you have acquiesced; now do you select the second name—almost anything but William, if you please."

So the professor's wife took the matter under advisement; for it was of too great moment for immediate decision. After much thought that night and early the next morning, she concluded that her family name, Canfield, should be bestowed in the second place. This was discussed at the breakfast table, and the choice approved by the professor.

IT HAS always been a mystery to the professor that, notwithstanding his established theories and fairly well established practice with regard to concentration, certain times there be when vagrant thoughts obtrude without any apparent or discoverable reason. He has numerous cuff-cards bearing data in relation to these phenomena. Cuff-cards, it may be stated for the convenience of lexicographers, are memorandum-bearing cuffs cut to the proper filing size; a simple expedient whereby the labor of transcription to library cards is obviated, albeit they come higher by the hundred. One of these derelicts upon the waves of thought got across the professor's bows that morning. He stopped at the very crisis of his lecture, with a pained and surprised expression; tried to proceed, became aware that he was presenting the subject in a way which would read strangely in his pupil's notes, and summarily dismissed the class, fifteen minutes ahead of time. He caught the next car for his home.

"My dear," he exclaimed, bursting suddenly into the sitting-room, "Canfield will never do—with Pingree. By itself it is unobjectionable, but with Pingree it is an impossibility. And I believe Pingree will have to be abandoned also; somehow it displeases me since——"

"Why, what on earth is the matter?" interrupted the professor's wife, dropping her sewing upon her lap. "What is wrong with the names—or either of them?"

"The circumstances are these, my dear," explained the professor, getting his right forefinger and left palm into that relativity without which it were for him folly to attempt elucidation. "Pingree sounds very well. Canfield sounds very well. Pingree Canfield sounds very well indeed. But consider that dire middle initial. Pingree C! Does it not follow, as the night the day, that our child will be nicknamed 'Greasy' in his very first game of marbles? Can you view with equanimity——"

And the professor stopped. For in this particular social pact the wife had a monopoly of the sense of humor, and her laughter was quite inexplicable to the serious-minded professor. A wholesome and musical laugh it was, and the professor loved it, laughing himself generally—as he did now—on account of its contagious character, though too often missing the humor of the situation which brought it forth.

"It is amusing, is it not?" remarked the professor rather doubtfully, after the merriment had subsided somewhat.

"It is amusing," replied the professor's wife, drying her eyes and resolutely dispelling the little camp-followers of mirth who persisted in their pursuit. "But, you dear goose, why did you have to run home at once? Wouldn't it have kept until evening? I should not have undertaken the formal christening in your absence." And she took up her sewing, very much amused.

But that was one of the professor's idiosyncrasies. The matter in mind, be it whatsoever it might, must be pursued forthwith. His was a mentality not equipped with block signals or other safety apparatus, and it was imperative that he keep the main line clear, or suffer the consequence of bringing his trains of thought into collision.

"Of course, you are right," said the professor's wife soberly enough, after a moment's consideration. "That would be an unhappy name; though it does seem too bad, after all, to rob the other boys of the fun," she added mischievously. And then suddenly this remarkable wife was wafted away upon the wings of another gale of laughter, for absolutely no reason whatever—the lack of reason being so obvious that the professor did not join in, but waited patiently for enlightenment.

"I was just thinking," she finally vouchsafed, "how I should have enjoyed seeing your change of expression when this gruesome thought came to you." And she laughed again.

"My dear," said the professor gently, "it seems to me at times that you hark back to profound distances and trivial sources for amusement." Nevertheless he felt, rather guiltily, that his expression might indeed have changed somewhat at that awful moment; very slightly, perhaps. Only there was nothing funny about that.

Back to his work went the professor, lunching downtown as was his wont and returning home in the late afternoon. After dinner he went into the library and busied himself with some references. The professor's wife guided the still nameless one safely across the border of the Land of Nod, and went into the library with her sewing. The professor was absorbed in his work, and she did not interrupt him. But when he replaced his book on the shelf and began looking for another she spoke.

"So you do not like Pingree for a name."

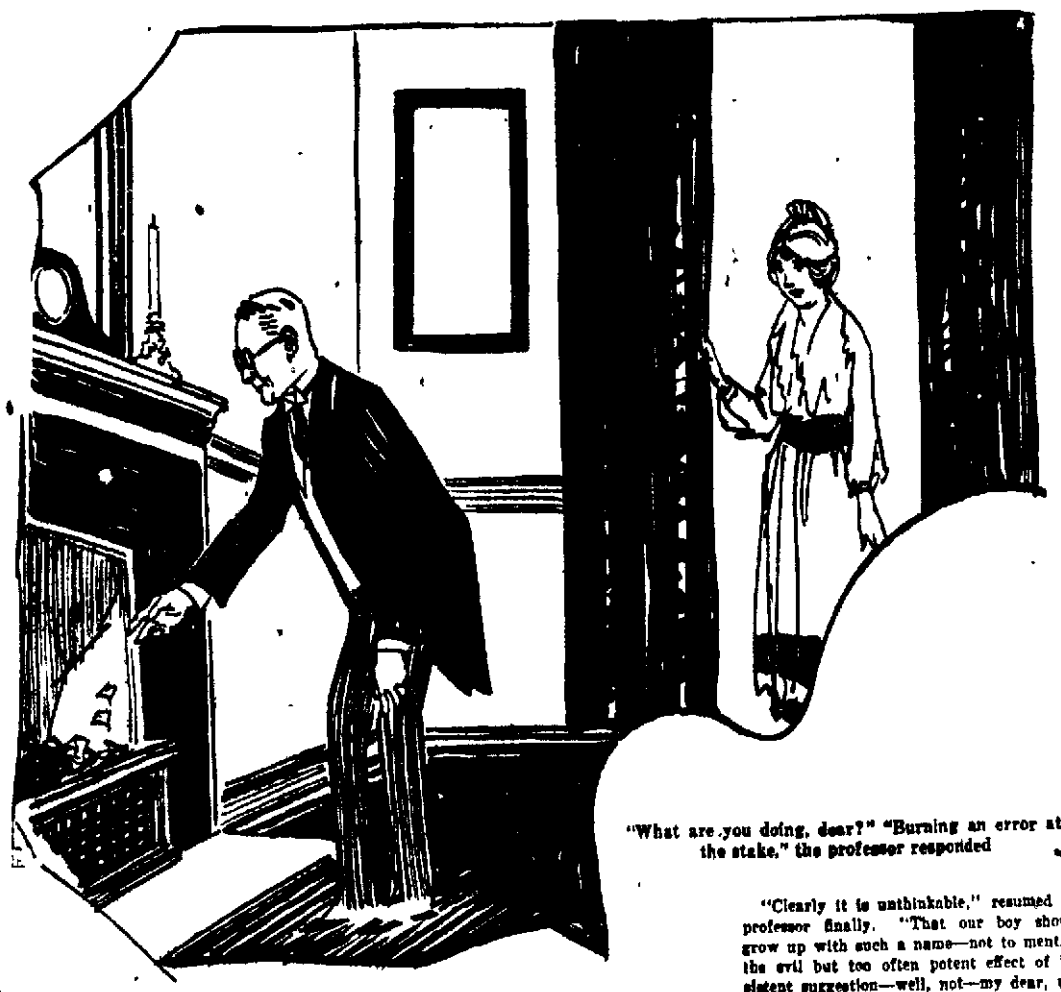
"Pingree?" repeated the professor absentmindedly. "Pingree? Oh! That matter of a name for the boy." He found the book he wanted and came back to the table. "Well, I must admit that the disagreeable consequence of a meddling juxtaposed initial has rather discontented me with it."

"How would Barton do? Your mother's father's name, you know. How does Barton Canfield sound?" The professor had opened his book, but the words lingered and finally fought their way into his attention.

"Hom Barton Canfield? Barton! Why, I like that! Barton—that is a good name—very good. Strange we did not think of it sooner." And the professor was lost in his tome.

THE subject came up at the breakfast table, but the professor was preoccupied with his plans for the day and did not enter into the matter with spirit, simply again expressing himself as quite satisfied with the names chosen.

With another class the professor was sailing the same sea as on the previous day, congratulating himself inwardly upon the more creditable voyage he would make, now that the troublesome derelict of the preceding trip was charted and avoidable.



"What are you doing, dear?" "Burning an error at the stake," the professor responded

He had reached the same place in his lecture, when he stopped suddenly with an amazed and troubled expression, made an altogether unsatisfactory attempt to take up again the thread of his discourse, and announced curtly, "The class is dismissed." He put on his hat and left the classroom without awaiting the dispersal of his wondering students.

His troubled face as he strode up the walk brought the professor's wife to the door to meet him with anxious inquiries. He led the way into the sitting room before he ventured any words.

"As regards that name Barton," he began without preface, upon his wife breathed a deep sigh of relief and took up her sewing. "It is clearly impossible Barton is a good name. Barton Canfield is above reproach. But it is, in this instance, our honored surname which makes for impossibility. Barton Endor! My dear"—and the professor talked with both hands—"do you not see plainly that Barton will be inevitably shortened to Bart? Bart Endor? Bartender! Bartender!" And the professor became inarticulate; while the professor's wife bit her lip, and kept biting it—for here was a strong man in pain, and it were inopportune to laugh.

"Clearly it is unthinkable," resumed the professor finally. "That our boy should grow up with such a name—not to mention the evil but too often potent effect of insistent suggestion—well, not—my dear, under the stress of circumstances permit me to sink to the undignified level of argot—not on your life!"

"Well, well, it is easily remedied," said the professor's wife soothingly.

"Yes. We must have another name. I must get this off my mind. I am daily disgracing myself before my students." The professor winced as he thought of the two dismissed classes. "This matter must be settled or I shall find myself a fit subject for a class on mental disorders." The professor really looked haggard. "We must have a name, and right away—some name—any name to——"

"William?" suggested the professor's wife quietly, taking a very long and very deliberate stitch.

The professor looked actually relieved. "Well, yes," he said; "why not? It is a good, honest, common name." He pondered for a moment. "And I begin to sense in a vague way why, perhaps, it is so common." He made a note on his cuff, kissed his wife fondly, and went peacefully back to the university.

If the records are kept with any degree of accuracy, it is writ large upon the books of the Recording Angel that the professor's wife did not laugh—while the professor was in the house. But did she really succeed in arresting her merriment until he was quite beyond hearing—past the lilac bushes and out of the front gate? And after all, what does that matter?

AS HEALTHY youngsters will, by whatever name they may be called, William Canfield waxed and grew. The professor set great value upon the opportunity thus afforded of studying at first hand and intimately the marvels of a developing mind and body, each tiny petal as it unfolded calling for his scientific enthusiasm and in the aggregate making for unprecedented growth in his collection of data. Only he did not know it was a flower that he was studying, and petals were never once mentioned in his notes. They dealt instead with reflexes and reactions and indications of perceptive growth, and other equally trivial things.

The professor's appreciation of William Canfield, he rather suddenly and quite disconcertingly concluded one day, was almost entirely psychological and zoological. His scrupulously trained mind was not receptive to many emotions, and he was honestly distressed to realize that no tender feelings toward his boy found any place in his thoughts. This was not altogether gratifying; but what would you? The truth was the main thing. So the professor put it all down on his cards, for he was hopelessly addicted to memoranda. He wrote these particular notes in Latin, being rather ashamed of them and knowing well that Latin affords excellent hiding. The professor's wife, by the way, could read Latin; but she could so much more readily read human nature that it was quite unnecessary in this instance.

And time passed by without any development which would justify the honest professor in modifying those wretched Latin notes. He perused them thoughtfully from time to time, and gazed inquiringly at the tip of his pen, but the most careful scrutiny failed to discover there a word to write in repudiation.

The professor's wife was always radiant, but when the professor reached home on one particular day some months later, her countenance was so superlatively happy that he was unable to account for it. He looked around for some unusually welcome visitor, and finding none in any reasonable degree of much concealment about the rooms he scanned the walls for a new painting, and the center table for a literary acquisition of special merit; but in vain. The reason for her joy, however, was soon made apparent, for she brought William Canfield from his sacred precincts, balanced him carefully on his feet, extended her hands, and said:

"Show us how, Laddie!"

And William Canfield did then and there demonstrate his ability to take three successive steps, wabbly but entirely sincere and effective, into the arms of his mother.

"My honor!" exclaimed the professor—which was one of his most profound ejaculations, his honor being no joking matter. "Why, William Canfield can walk!" And in his delight he cradled the little one in his arms and wildly paced the floor, placing a large loud kiss upon the dimpled cheek—very much indeed like the kiss of a father, with not a smack of the psychologist or zoologist about it. And the professor's wife was very happy—so happy that her voice trembled a little as she said:

"Of course, he can walk, dear. Why not? Didn't he inherit feet?" But not a word did she say of the long rehearsals which had led up to this grand exhibition and triumph. And the professor continued to pace the floor with an unwonted amount of lingo-talk to his son and the astonished reiteration, "William Canfield can walk!"

THIS was a thing which had seemed to him so remote that the professor had not considered it seriously. He admitted in his notes that night (in English) that it had awakened in him an inexplicable emotion to observe that William Canfield had tentatively assumed perpendicularity, and that in some manner it seemed to markedly increase his esteem for the child to have it evince a desire to forgo the quadrupedal method of locomotion.

And soon thereafter it was written in these notes that William had quite forsaken that objectionable mode of progression, and behaved just like a human being.

And in fullness and tract of time it appeared of record that the professor indulged in frequent walks around the square with William. And lots of other things about Willie which were in strange contrast to the ponderous and learned notes which had preceded. In fact, it is greatly to be feared that the scholarly tone of that formidable record became distinctly lower for is it possible to conceive of a memorandum about the behavior of "Billy Boy" containing a seriously scientific observation?

The professor ran across those Latin notes one day. He started to read them again, but thought better of it, not being in a penitent mood. Instead, and far more wisely, he tore them deliberately into very small pieces, not in the manner of one who merely destroys a record, but more as though he had found a delightful occupation. And he consigned the fragments to the grate, watching the little flares of light and curls of smoke with much pleasure. The professor's wife came in while he was so engaged, and was struck by his beatific mien.

"What are you doing, dear?" she asked.

"Burning an error at the stake," he responded smilingly. "Where's my playmate?"

Shenagolden's Magic—By Florence Seyler Thompson

FROM the West to the sea, following the running races, had come Shenagolden, sometime of Kilmallock, on a pilgrimage of hate, and, as the miles grew less between him and Rodney Hughes, he felt physical satisfaction in letting his rage uncurbed in his heart. For many years, for many reasons, his anger had burned low, perforce, lest he himself be consumed. Out of work and discredited, because of the lie that had nearly broken his heart, he was kept from being a murderer only because his enemy had gone where he had no money to pursue. When the water no longer separated him from Hughes, it was months before he located his old employer, the trail leading to the Golden Gate, back to Memphis, down to New Orleans, up to the Chicago Derby, and now, bound Eastward, beckoned by the name he had printed in a Turf journal, his revenge seemed in sight.

That Hughes was not racing his string under his own name, Shenagolden did not at first know, but when he learned that Black Death, a famous runner that had already in his brief career killed two grooms and maimed a jockey for life, was really owned by Hughes, and was entered for the Great Event—the Six-furlongs Sweepstakes at Sheepshead—his mind was made up.

Even before he had crossed from Kilmallock to England, to work among the horses he loved, young Terence had sometimes been seen by his intimates to grow suddenly white and pinched around the nostrils, while his eyes narrowed to slits in his excessive anger, but who could stand long in mortal terror of a boy with one brown, burning eye, when the other eye was Irish blue? Terence Shenagolden fancied his peculiarity the brand of Cain, but others who loved more than feared would not have had his two eyes alike—he would not have been Terence.

Could he help it that his heart so softened at the sight of a pretty face, when some gray-orbed, black-lashed colleen shot the splendid glory of her eyes full upon him, that a slow and reluctant smile stole over his lips, and a sweet, low whistle, that never came straight, issued from the corner of his mouth? One did not dislike Shenagolden for these things, but came nearest to it when running athwart his will—for he would have his own way—he loved authority, and dominion came to be as the breath of his nostrils.

One very wonderful gift he had, by which he had become known in every stable in England, and the notoriety had followed him to America. It was this magic of his, indeed, when exercised in public for the first time, that had brought about the breach with Hughes, who had accused him of drugging the horse upon which he had exercised his power. The animal had lain in stupor for a while, Hughes and his friends lost their money, and Terence was disgraced. He could have borne it all, and begged to be kept on in the most menial service, had not Hughes told that lie, and declared that the horse was doped!

WITH a purpose so grim, he was naturally not anxious to forgather with the grooms and idlers about the stables nor the touts about the track, and so it was with swift dismay that he saw, almost as soon as he was within the big gates, a jockey whom he had known, and who, in fact, had been present on that humiliating occasion so long ago in England. "Slim Jim" Lind recognized him at once, but gave no hint of remembrance of that which Terence cherished the more the fiercer it hurt.

Lind, he knew, must be riding for Hughes, and he kept his ears open for all the gossip of the track, and it was with strange emotions that he drank in the significantly whispered words:

"Hughes is playing for more than the big stake this time—it's for life itself," said one. * * * "What yer givin' us?" snorted another, "yer know he's barred from the turf!" * * * "That doesn't prevent his putting his string in another name, smarty! He's had a horse in every race of any account since that crooked deal of his at New Orleans!"

"He's gone to pieces along with Black Death," the first man resumed. "It's nothing but the horse's bad temper that ails him, and it's his black soul that ails Hughes. He's on his last legs, and nobody but one specialist over in Europe can save him. His whole string's sold now but the black, that's entered for the big purse this afternoon—and you can't trust that horse more'n you could the devil!"

"Surest thing you know," assented the other. "Why, I remember one time, when Death had lost a race, Hughes shook his fist under his nose, and foamin' at the mouth, yelled, 'And I paid $22,000 to pick that live coal out of hell!'"

The knowing one nodded, and continued: "The horse is entered in the name of his new wife, who doesn't know the first thing about the turf. She's dead stuck on Hughes, though nobody else, who's on to him, will trust or help him. 'Slim Jim's' straight, and will never throw a race—but the black may throw him! It's a good thing for Hughes' weak heart that he's not here to see the finish!"

SHENAGOLDEN turned away, furies raging in his heart. Thwarted again, when every nerve tingled with the longing to kill!

It was a long time before his violent anger was succeeded by a calm hardly less demoniac, for he caught a glimpse of the once famous and still magnificent racer, Black Death, and a sure instinct whispered that the black beast had in his eye a look that boded ill, and that the great race was lost before it was yet run. Hughes had made his reputation and vanity suffer! Now his own life was at stake, and forfeited!

Shenagolden was aroused from his reverie by the surging of the monster crowd, that spread along down the track, behind the fence, spilling over the grandstand—the occupants of carriages and touring cars adding a riot of color and noise to the animated scene. Again he saw the little one-hundred-and-five-pound jockey, Lind, flirting his whip in recognition to some one in the grandstand, and, following his glance, Shenagolden beheld a girlish-looking figure and an eager but worried face. A second look took in the added details of a black gown and a small black toque trimmed with gold-colored satin, over which trailed a bright green feather.

A sudden lull in the laughter and the hub-bub, a tremulous quiver of excitement, and then a perfect babel of sound announced that the starters in the first race were off. Shenagolden picked his winner in one of the tail-enders, for he himself had always been fond of getting away slowly. Ah but that was a terrific burst of speed! His choice was still behind at the half, neck and neck at the stretch—now for a spurt! He felt the blood beating in his neck! There! The despised tail-ender went to the leaders with a rush, rounded the far turn and drew away into an easy lead in the last furlong!

This was life related to the former jockey! Through three or more events he sat, every nerve tense and tingling. Then he strolled over to the paddock. The next but one on the card was the great event of the day and a nervous thrill pervaded the vast throng. The bookies and the talent had their hands full. Tremendous odds were offered and taken, for Black Death's unreliability was known to all. Shenagolden listened to the betting and the gossip with a fierce joy, and then he caught his breath as he came in sight of the famous runner himself with Lind, his mount, in conference with the lady of the green feather. Her face was pale, and her hands were clasped and her eyes fixed upon the horse.

"Surely not," he muttered to himself. "She cannot be the wife of Hughes—and yet—!"

The three gazed at the black horse, whose hue was not a gleaming, glossy black, but a bluish duskiness, wonderful to behold. His nostrils seemed to glow, either with hot blood or devil's fire. Shenagolden stole another look at the anxious face under the green feather. His hot anger, nursed through long years of waiting for vengeance, still burned as he gazed again at the danger signal flaunting in the whites of the big horse's eyes.

Then the inevitable happened. Just as the horses came under the wire in the race before his own, Black Death began a dance, led by the furies raging within him, and all but threw and trampled the stable boy who held his head. Shenagolden could not have explained his complex emotions, as he watched the maddened horse struggling with his trainer, grooms and jockey. He knew that all hope of getting Black on the track was futile—all hope o winning the big purse gone!

"And I"—— he crooned to himself, "I, Shenagolden of Kilmallock, can tame this blue devil! I can give that race to Rodney Hughes—to the black cur who shamed me before all England, on Derby Day!"

SUDDENLY Jim Lind, catching his gaze, sprang from the knot of perspiring men about the frantic brute, clutched Shenagolden by the arm, and, panting and breathless, exclaimed to the lady:

"Here he is, Eunice! * * * Terence, this is my sister—Hughes' wife! For God's sake, help! It's life or death for him!"

Eunice clasped her hands again, convulsively—involuntarily. She tried to speak with dignity, but, torn with emotion, her voice broke as she said:

"They tell me you are a horse-whisperer—that you can do anything with a horse that you want to. Oh, Terence——" She burst into a half sob, and Shenagolden started at the dear old Irish name upon her lips.

"He—Rodney, my husband—calls you that! Have you any other name?" She faltered and crimsoned even in her hurried anguish. "He has said—Oh, often of late—'That boy Terence could manage Black Death!' He did you wrong one time, I know, he has told me—but there was a reason—it was some money he had bet—Oh, I am ashamed to speak of it!"

Between her excited utterances she caught at her heart.

"But he is so ill now! I must win this race for him! Rodney admits—I don't understand, exactly—that you only used your power too strongly! Oh, use it once again—for my sake! It seems as if the angels had listened to my prayer!"

She looked at him wistfully, and Lind stood stoically by.

Almost with her first words there had come to Shenagolden a sudden widening of the eyes, as if a curtain had been lifted—and a burden seemed rolled away from his heart.

"I came to kill your husband," he said simply, and in the same moment was turning toward the horse, when a gong sounded and through a megaphone a hoarse voice announced that the Six-Furlong race would be called in just five minutes! Black Death was still in a violent rage!

A dead stillness had fallen, and of the vast audience those near enough heard the velvety voice of the horse-whisperer. He was saying something unintelligible, but soft and musical, as he approached the angry beast. Not once did his pace slacken, but straight up, unfalteringly, did he come, and at the first lyric note the animal's quivering ceased, and Black Death stood still.

Shenagolden touched him lightly on the neck, whispered again, and the great horse neighed and lay down. For a moment only, a deadly fear gripped Terence, but it passed as quickly, and then, to the accompaniment of a colossal gasp of horror, he had stretched himself full length upon the panting body of that passive volcano, and impudently, but superbly, lighted a cigarette!

Ten seconds later he had risen, and without a word or glance had strolled away—and Black Death had followed him to the starting post, as if he were his dog!

The crowd went mad for a moment, in a riot of mingled joy and range, and as Lind leaped lightly to his seat in the saddle men literally threw money at the bookmakers in their frantic haste to bet, and the insanity of the minute and some brief seconds in which Black Death, a bluish streak of leaping flesh, topped with a blur of green and gold, the colors of the old Hughes stables, won the Six-Furlongs in record time, was the most intense ever known in the history of the great classic event of the East.

The fact that Shenagolden's pilgrimage of hate came to such a peculiar end is perhaps accounted for by that other fact that Terence had one eye that was blue, though the other was brown.

While the big purse of thirty-five thousand dollars added a few months to the life of Rodney Hughes, and gave him a chance to retract his words about the drugging of his horse, which he did right handsomely, too, before he died, the European specialist could only tide him over the winter. And now it seems that some time the velvet voice of Shenagolden of Kilmallock, with its strings like the harp of Tara, will whisper away the heart of Black Death's mistress.

CHANGE OF LIFE WOMAN'S TRIAL

Proof That Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is of Great Help at This Period

Metropolis, Illinois.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it is all it claims to be and has benefited me wonderfully. I had been sick for eight months with a trouble which confined me to my bed and was only able to be up part of the time, when I was advised by a friend, Mrs. Smith, to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills. I was so much benefited by the use of these medicines that I was able to be up and about in two weeks. I was at the Change of Life when I began taking the medicines and I passed over that time without any trouble. Now I am hale and hearty, do all my housework, washing, ironing, scrubbing, and cooking, all there is to do about a house, and can walk two or three miles without getting too tired. I know of several of my neighbors who have been helped by your medicines."—Mrs. EMMA CULVER, 705 E. 7th St., Metropolis, Illinois.

First Baptist Church.

The keynote to the successful work being done by the First Baptist church of Wichita Falls is big business and big faith. Nothing is omitted in the Sunday services to bear out this statement. The services will be regular from the standpoint of time only. Special features both morning and evening will be not only attractive and interesting, but helpful and far-reaching in their influence. At the 11 o'clock hour Dr. B. W. Vining, who is regarded as one of the most able speakers among the Baptist ministry of this state, will speak on "The Doctrine of Tithing." Dr. Vining is the newly elected conservation secretary of the State Baptist Convention of Texas, and comes for special work among the Baptist churches of Wichita county during the coming week. Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock he will speak to the Baptist women at the First Baptist church. Rev. O. L. Powers will have for his evening subject, at 7:30, "A Call for a Woman." Rev. Powers says: "This will be mothers and daughters night at our church, and my sermon will be directed to them. However, nothing will be said that should not be heard by every mother and daughter, regardless of age. In the morning I will pass cards to each and every girl in the junior and intermediate departments of the Sunday school, having them answer two questions: What do you like most about your mother? What you do dislike most about your mother? Answers to these questions will be read at the evening service. Men are cordially invited to be present." The First Baptist church has a chorus choir numbering 40 voices and is regarded by visitors from other places as being the best among the Baptist churches of the state. The choir is composed of some of the best talent of Wichita Falls. Under the direction of Mr. Vaughn Ray, excellent musical programs are rendered at each service. Sunday morning, the soloist will be Miss Elizabeth Hamilton, who will sing "How Long Will Thou Forget Me." The choir will sing as the special anthem, "The Lord Is Exalted." For the evening, Mrs. Louella Thompson, soloist at the Scottish Rite cathedral, Dallas, Texas, will render the principal solo. The choir will sing "Jerusalem" by Parker. In addition, a new male quartet will make their first appearance in Wichita Falls. The quartet is composed of R. Vaugn Ray, first tenor; Ivan Murchison, second tenor; Charles H. Angle, baritone, and William E. Young, bass. This quartet is a permanent organization, and will sing regularly at the First Baptist church.

What happiness have we gotten from books? What is your chief source of happiness? Musical numbers to be supplied. This is going to be a very interesting program. This will be a discussion worth while, and all who come will find a helpful message in the study of the needs of the hour in our own community.—T. S. PITTENGER, Pastor.
